I'm a web developer. Have been developing on the client side for years. I've took a step further to the server side almost three years ago with ASP. After that I got to know XML and hey, I love it. I even made a translation of the XML Schema spec into Spanish in June, 2001. I usually get many emails about problems I hardly know regarding XML, but I like to investigate and I try to do my best and help others solving problems.

Every place I worked at I had to program and program. It seems people around here in Spain just want me to program stupid applications and honestly, I do not like it. I like Analysis and EAI and the thing I like most currently is Web Usability. I have decided recently to consider myself as not used to my full capacity. But hey, I'm trying and I'll try to make my best anyway, maybe someday...

Currently, I'm in a similar situation to that of StevenCummings, though I've been working in elearning companies for the last three years. I need to finish this project. Yeah, I need more sleep. But Cocoon and Xindice are driving me nuts at times...arghhh... Oh, and I'm sure my wife Carmen and my dog Ator will love me even more once done. I'm too sleepy now to paying attention to them...but they know and understand me. Well, Ator doesn't seem to, cause everytime I try to explain it to him, he moves his head from side to side...oh, well, he lives in a dog's world without concerns...

Oh, yes, I used to have a web site at <http://www.josema.net>, but I'm too busy now to make something for it, so it's empty. You can contact me at: josema | at | josema . net .
